The Interurban Trail is so named because it sits partly along the route of the Denver Tramway Trolley's Golden Line. The streetcar system once criss-crossed metro Denver and served the area for 40 years before being decommissioned in 1950. The trail also shares a right-of-way with an electric utility. It's 1.3 miles of concrete along the border of Arvada and Wheat Ridge, Colorado and passes through two parks: Four Acre Lake Park and Jack B. Tomlinson Park. There's ample signage along the trail to help trail users navigate.
