Overview

The Suffolk Seaboard Coastline Trail is currently a 5.6-mile trail in three separate segments that will one day span 20 miles, connecting the communities of Suffolk and Chesapeake in southeastern Virginia.

About the Route

In 2015, the first 2.3 miles of the paved pathway opened, stretching from the historical village of Driver to the rural outskirts of Suffolk. A second phase was completed in 2017, extending the trail farther east 1.1 miles to Bromay Street in Chesapeake. At each end are small parking lots, fix-it stations, water, and restroom facilities. There is one at-grade road crossing with Shoulders Hill Road, approximately one mile from the east terminus.

In the heart of Suffolk, two additional segments of the trail have been constructed. The first trail provides about a half-mile of pathway just east of Main Street around the outside of Cedar Hill Cemetery, a short distance away from the city's Seaboard Station Railroad Museum, a must visit for rail aficionados. A second segment of trail was opened in 2021, spanning about 1.5 mile from Suburban Drive to Nansemond Parkway northeast of downtown - a pleasant and shady stretch of trail along the former rail corridor.

Each segment of the rail-trail follows the former Seaboard Coastal Railroad right of way and much of the pathway is surrounded by trees, farmland, and neighborhoods. It crosses over several creeks and winds through some of the area's plentiful marshland. Local wildlife abounds, so be on the lookout for copperheads sunning on the trail.

Connections

The trail is part of a larger 41-mile effort called the South Hampton Roads Trail, which will link Suffolk, Chesapeake, Portsmouth, Norfolk, and Virginia Beach.
